Nineteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

I love watching people who don't know they're being watched. I mean that as people come into our orbit, it's edifying to see how they behave when they don't know we're watching them.

I remember my friend Celeste, decades before the environmental movement really got going, painstakingly removing a single sheet of paper from the printer and turning it over, so that the subsequent text could be printed on it. What really stood out about that to me was not only that she took the time to save a single piece of paper, but that, at some point, she took the time to memorize how to turn the paper around in the printer so the next page was printed correctly, not smashed on top of the previous text. (These are the technological skills that still impress me, all these years later.)

We should all be like the servants who are ready to open the door to their Master when he returns. They don't have anything to hide, because they've been diligent and disciplined in doing the good work they've been assigned. I love those people, the ones who keep their homes bright and cheerful, by doing the tasks they perform when no one is looking.

Like Celeste, the servants faithful to the Church's mandate to care for our common home are careful with every piece of paper, every recyclable plate, even when no one is watching. That is so hard! I worry about what my Master might say to me, asking why I haven't been more careful with the earth's resources.

Oh, but I've got DECADES to do better, right? No, the hour comes when we least expect it.

What good habits keep you ready for the Master?

Décimo Noveno Domingo de Tiempo Ordinario

Me encanta observar a la gente que no sabe que está siendo observada. Quiero decir que cuando las personas entran en nuestra órbita, es edificante ver cómo se comportan cuando no saben que las estamos observando.

Recuerdo a mi amiga Celeste, décadas antes de que el movimiento ambiental se consolidara, como sacaba con esmero una hoja de papel de la impresora y le daba la vuelta para poder imprimir de ambos lados. Lo que realmente me impactó de eso no fue solo que se tomara el tiempo de salvar una sola hoja, sino que, en algún momento, se tomara el tiempo de memorizar cómo voltear el papel en la impresora para que la siguiente página se imprimiera correctamente, sin imprimirla sobre el texto anterior. (Estas son las habilidades tecnológicas que todavía me impresionan, después de tantos años).

Todos deberíamos ser como los siervos que están listos en la puerta para recibir a su Señor cuando regrese. No tienen nada que ocultar, porque han sido diligentes y disciplinados en el buen trabajo que se les ha asignado. Amo a esas personas, a las que mantienen sus hogares brillantes y alegres, realizando sus tareas cuando nadie los ve.

Como Celeste, somos nosotros los siervos fieles a cargo de la Iglesia, nuestro hogar en común, y debemos cuidar cada papel, cada plato reciclable, incluso cuando nadie nos ve. ¡Qué difícil! Me preocupa lo que me dirá mi Señor, si me pregunta por qué no he sido más cuidadosa con los recursos de la tierra.

Ah, pero me quedan DÉCADAS para hacerlo mejor, ¿verdad? No, la hora llega cuando menos lo esperamos.

¿Qué buenos hábitos te mantienen listo para la venida del Señor?
