Twenty-fifth Sunday in Ordinary Time

Ah, football season. Is there anything more exciting? Is there any assembly more joyous than the community of believers who gather at the altar of football, wearing the liturgical robes bearing their team's logos?

Did you hear the fight song the nearly 70,000 Philadelphia Eagles fans sang, somehow all on pitch, (thanks to the recording playing to keep everyone together) at the season opener? The unity and fervor of that huge audience shook the stadium. Now THIS is the shared faith, almost worth dying for, that unites all believers..

Huh. How is it that the singing at Sunday Mass isn't as robust, as heartfelt, as joyous as the cheers and songs routinely chanted at NFL games? Why does a text like Lift high the cross, the love of Christ proclaim! not inspire the same ear-piercing singing as Hit 'em low, hit'em high, and watch our Eagles fight!—which, by the way, is pitched five notes higher than the average hymn?

I think the answer lies in today's curious parable. The secular world has found delightful ways to build community, and Jesus applauds the unjust steward for recognizing what works out there in the world, and using it to his advantage.

This wily servant bets on the (corrupt) financial savvy of the Master's debtors. They know he's cooking the books in their favor, and, by siding with them, he's betting that they will be good to him after the Master dismisses him. Now that's using your talent to ensure your retirement plan!

Like so many, my heart soars when I hear huge crowds singing and chanting for their team. How can we capture that joy when singing the texts of our faith?

What successful secular strategies can you adapt for growing your spiritual life?

Vigésimo Quinto Domingo de Tiempo Ordinario

Ah, la temporada de fútbol americano. ¿Hay algo más emocionante? ¿Hay una asamblea más alegre que la comunidad de creyentes que se reúnen en el altar del fútbol americano, vestidos con los mantos litúrgicos con los logos de su equipo?

¿Escucharon la porra que cantaron los casi 70,000 aficionados de los Philadelphia Eagles, todos en la cancha (gracias a la grabación que se reproducía para mantener a todos juntos) en el partido inaugural de la temporada? La unidad y el fervor de esa enorme audiencia estremecieron el estadio. Esta es la fe compartida, por la que casi vale la pena morir, que une a todos los creyentes.

¿Cómo es posible que los cantos en la misa dominical no sean tan vigorosos, tan sinceros y tan alegres como las ovaciones y las porras que se corean habitualmente en los partidos de la NFL? ¿Por qué un texto como "¡Levanta la cruz, proclama el amor de Cristo!" no inspira el mismo canto ensordecedor que "¡Golpéalos bajo, golpéalos alto, y mira a nuestras Águilas luchar!", que, por cierto, tiene un tono cinco notas más agudo que el himno promedio?

Creo que la respuesta está en la curiosa parábola de hoy. El mundo secular ha encontrado maneras encantadoras de construir comunidad, y Jesús aplaude al administrador injusto por reconocer lo que funciona en el mundo y usarlo a su favor.

Este siervo astuto apuesta por la (corrupta) astucia financiera de los deudores del Amo. Saben que manipula las cuentas a su favor y, al aliarse con ellos, apuesta a que le serán buenos después de que el Amo lo despida. ¡Eso sí que es usar tu talento para asegurar tu jubilación!

Como a tantos, me llena de alegría oír a multitudes cantando y coreando para su equipo. ¿Cómo podemos capturar esa alegría al cantar los textos de nuestra fe?

¿Qué estrategias seculares exitosas puedes adaptar para hacer crecer tu vida espiritual?
