TWENTY- THIRD SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

Here's a hint about getting the inside story of a gospel text. When Jesus speaks about a particular problem (in this case the issue of confronting someone who has hurt you) you can bet that exact issue is coming up among his disciples, or the communities they founded.

I think the demographic that most understands this process is Religious communities. They are an extraordinary counterculture in many ways, but imagine living in community with someone who drives you crazy, and whose membership in your community was something over which you may have had no control.

Any kind of community life is the great testing ground of faith. Think of the family in which you grew up. I think of my own kind parents, who tried and tried to get their kids to do better as human beings. Their words are my guideposts today, although, of course, I gave them no attention then.

One of the most insightful things I've ever heard occurred in a small group in the Catholic Biblical School. We were talking about today's gospel. The student said, "I think that's why young people crave tv sitcoms like "Friends," where the siblings, roommates, colleagues in the workplace speak directly to the person who's bothering them. That doesn't happen in real life. If one of my adult kids says a harsh word to their sibling, the sibling just writes them off forever. No fighting. No conversation at all. They've just been cancelled."

St. Teresa of Avila thought that relationships in community (your family, your workplace, your home) were often a greater indication of one's relationship to God than the heights of mystical prayer. And the first teacher, of course, is the family.

Have you been able to take constructive criticism from a friend?

While Marcie has made the difficult decision to step down from this ministry, we are incredibly grateful for the beauty she has brought to our parish grounds and for the countless hours she has generously given over the years.

Thank you, Marcie, for sharing your gifts with our parish. May God bless you for your faithful service and generosity!

VIGÉSIMO-TERCER DOMINGO DE TIEMPO ORDINARIO

Aquí tienes una pista para poder entender el trasfondo de un texto evangélico: cuando Jesús habla de un problema concreto —en este caso, la cuestión de confrontar a alguien que te ha hecho daño—, puedes estar seguro de que ese mismo asunto está surgiendo entre sus discípulos o en las comunidades que ellos fundaron.

Creo que el grupo demográfico que mejor comprende este proceso son las comunidades religiosas. En muchos aspectos, constituyen una contracultura extraordinaria; pero imagínate vivir en comunidad con alguien que te saca de quicio y cuya incorporación a dicha comunidad fue algo sobre lo que quizá tu no tuviste ningún control.

Vivir en cualquier forma de vida comunitaria puede poner realmente a prueba tu fe. Piensa en la familia en la que creciste. Yo pienso en mis propios padres, personas bondadosas que se esforzaron una y otra vez por lograr que sus hijos fueran mejores seres humanos. Sus palabras son hoy mi guía, aunque, por supuesto, en aquel entonces no les prestaba atención. Una de las reflexiones más profundas que he escuchado surgió en un grupo pequeño de la Escuela Bíblica Católica. Estábamos hablando del Evangelio de hoy. Un estudiante comentó: «Creo que por eso que a los jóvenes les encantan las comedias televisivas como Friends, donde los hermanos, compañeros de piso o colegas de trabajo hablan directamente con la persona que les molesta. Eso no sucede en la vida real. Si uno de mis hijos adultos le dice algo duro a su hermano, este simplemente lo borra de su vida para siempre. Sin peleas. Sin conversación alguna. Simplemente quedan "cancelados"».

Santa Teresa de Ávila consideraba que las relaciones en comunidad (tu familia, tu lugar de trabajo, tu hogar) solían ser un indicador más claro de la relación que una persona tiene con Dios que las cimas de la oración mística. Y la primera escuela, por supuesto, es la familia.

¿Has sido capaz de aceptar una crítica constructiva de un amigo?
